Running thru June 9th, the 22nd Brooklyn Film Festival showcases the talented work of emerging American filmmakers, but it also opens up an important platform for Latin-Americans newcomers. Here are some exquisite works worth checking out.

UNA GREAT MOVIE

An African-American woman goes back to Mexico in search of a lover from the past she never forgot. There she experiences the locals' traditions and culture, as well as an unexpected opportunity to change her destiny. Writer-Director Jennifer Sharp crafts a gentle, feel-good romantic comedy about finding love in modern days, punctuated by the struggles of a new filmmaker trying to produce her film. Cinematographer Carlos Diazmunos captures the amazing seaside landscapes with sensual shots, giving the film an elegant aesthetic. Extremely funny and smart, it's filled with eccentric characters, including 50 local Mexicans, and a unique comedic style. (Screens June 7, 8.)
